The diagram illustrates five examples of smart objects that are not considered smart objects in this context. Each example is shown in a box with a red prohibition symbol (a circle with a diagonal line) overlaid on it. The examples are:

- Eyeglasses with electronic functions: A pair of black-rimmed glasses with a small camera lens on the right temple. A blue beam of light emanates from the lens, pointing towards a musical note.
- Smartwatches: A black smartwatch with a circular face and several buttons.
- Pens with electronic functions: A gold-colored pen with a small camera lens on the barrel. A blue beam of light emanates from the lens, pointing towards a musical note.
- Small cameras: A small, black, cube-shaped camera being held by a hand.
- Small earphones: A small, white, earbud-style earphone being held by a hand.

Even the slightest removal is prohibited.

Examples of Frequently Seen Prohibited Behavior

Opening question booklets or writing down answers or the examination number, or your name before the exam staff says, "Please start answering."

Continuing to answer the questions after the exam staff says, "Please stop." "Not handing out the answer sheets immediately when collecting them."

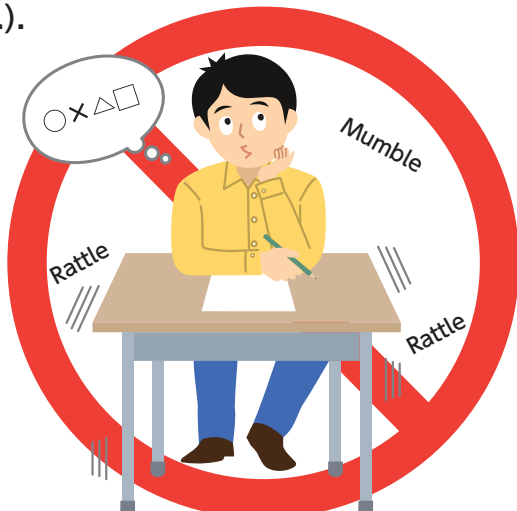

In the "Japanese as a Foreign Language" test, looking at the questions or answering on an answer sheet (mark-sheet) for the "Reading Comprehension" or other sections during designated time for "Writing" section.

Looking at and/or answering the actual questions in the "Listening-Reading Comprehension" or "Listening Comprehension" sections during the instructions or practice exercises of those sections in the "Japanese as a Foreign Language" test.

Actions that annoy other examinees (rattling a desk, mumbling to yourself, etc.).

Leaving the exam room without permission of the exam staff.

Note: During the "Listening-Reading Comprehension" and "Listening Comprehension" sections of the "Japanese as a Foreign Language" test (while audio portions are being played), even with permission for using the restroom or leaving the exam room due to feeling unwell, you will not be allowed to return until these sections have finished.
