Japanese High School Baseball Championships

This year's winners! Osaka for the win, heheh.

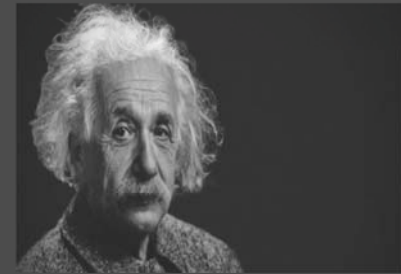

In case anyone of you didn't know, 6 August 2019 was the start of the national baseball tournament, also known as Koshien (甲子園), named after the stadium that was built to hold this tournament. Of the 3730 high schools across Japan, only 49 managed to grasp hold of the ticket to play at the dream stage. The finals were on 23 August, with 履正社 (Risei Sha), the Osaka representative winning the championship for the first time in the history of the tournament. Just 3 days later, a

Without a cup of bubble tea to accompany my Merlion cookie provided as a snack in the fun pack, in front of me was a LIHO Tea marching contingent! Bubble tea has become a necessary beverage in our daily lives and an important socio-economic group in Singapore.

Unhelpful Guide to Science Katakana

Einstein is not amused with your nonsense, Japan

Having gone through Third Language before coming to Japan, a lot of the Japanese notes and textbooks I first encountered when I started my studies here didn't look as scary as they might to someone who's new to the language. Somehow or other, however, the sight of the periodic table in Japanese struck fear into my heart. If you've seen it before, you know that it's a huge mess, with a mix of katakata here, kanji, there, and worse still, both in the same word (for instance, fluorine is written フッ素 fusso).

A group of five people (three women and two men) are posing on a bridge with a rusty metal railing. They are all smiling and making peace signs. The background features a rocky riverbed, bare trees, and a snow-capped mountain under a cloudy sky. The text "Thank you for your kind attention" is overlaid in the center in a white, serif font, flanked by two horizontal white bars.
